Weakest Link in the Chain As Goes Starkweather, So Goes Monona

By DENNIS MADIGAN

Like most towns in the area, the town of Starkweather has long been the least of its neighbors. While treated as a village, it has not entered Monona since the dawn of time.

MADIGAN

Starkweather Creek flows into Lake Monona near the historic Madison area. The creek has long been a source of water for the town, but its pollution has become a major problem. The creek is now almost completely dead, and the water is so polluted that it is unusable for drinking.

The creek is now almost completely dead, and the water is so polluted that it is unusable for drinking. The pollution is caused by the Starkweather Paper Mill, which has been dumping its waste into the creek since it was built in 1910.

Plan Calls for Quadruple Sessions for Legislature

By DENNIS MADIGAN

Yearly sessions of the State Legislature should be held in four periods of roughly equal length, according to a proposal submitted Tuesday by the Joint Legislative Study Commission.

The proposal would mean that the Legislature would meet in four sessions of roughly equal length, rather than the current two sessions of roughly equal length.
