Automatic Insecticide Sprayer Big Aid In Keeping Flies Off Cows

Several Wisconsin farmers who tried an automatic cow sprayer last year for horn fly control with the results, and are now continuing to use the device, are reported by E. H. Fisher, of the University Department of economic entomology has reported.

The device is similar to the "back-suction" type used for spraying lawns, and is mounted on a tractor. The cow is estimated to absorb 2 cents a day per cow, but this is a small price to pay for the protection of increased milk and milk production.

Dr. Fisher said that the automatic cow sprayer is a big help in keeping flies off cows. The device is similar to the "back-suction" type used for spraying lawns, and is mounted on a tractor. The cow is estimated to absorb 2 cents a day per cow, but this is a small price to pay for the protection of increased milk and milk production.

Although some farmers have made their own automatic sprayers from milk cans and other material, these are not as effective as the commercial device. The commercial device is a big help in keeping flies off cows.

The device is similar to the "back-suction" type used for spraying lawns, and is mounted on a tractor. The cow is estimated to absorb 2 cents a day per cow, but this is a small price to pay for the protection of increased milk and milk production.
