Mayor vetoes limits on pledge

By Tom Capp
PITTSBURGH — Mayor Tom Capp has vetoed a resolution that would have limited the number of times the City Council starts its meetings with the Pledge of Allegiance.

Capp said Wednesday he vetoed the measure because he felt it would "alienate, disgust and disenfranchise" those who felt strongly that the pledge ought to be recited at every meeting, while those who felt otherwise were not likely to be alienated.

The resolution passed 4-3 at a raucous meeting Tuesday, when almost 30 people came to oppose the efforts to limit the recitations of the pledge and threatened to recall the resolution's author, Ald. Len Nelson, and other council members who did not agree with their views.

Calling Nelson "sincere and honorably honest," Capp explained he was not vetoing the measure in response to the recall threats.
