A. E. Smith

Victims Rushed to Fall Creek Doctor

The men were taken from the wrecked car and rushed to Fall Creek where a doctor pronounced Dawson to be dead.

He continued with The Capital Times, however, as assistant city editor and in December, 1928, became city editor.

Nov. 11, 1929, he became the first full-time secretary of the State Street Advancement association.

He and Mr. Smith had been on a business trip and were returning to Madison when their car crashed.

Dawson was born Jan. 2, 1865, at Helms, Wis. He was a son of the Rev. and Mrs. William Dawson Sr., now of Milwaukee.

With his parents, he moved to Madison when he was 11 years of age, and except for the times he worked in Milwaukee, Des Moines and Columbus, he lived here.

He is survived by his parents; his wife, one son, William M. Dawson, III; one daughter, Anna; a brother, Gordon E. Dawson, local attorney; and by one sister, Mrs. Charles LaFour, St. Louis, Mo.

His parents came to Madison Saturday night after learning of his death.

Lloyd H. Stafford, an advertising solicitor for The Capital Times and close friend of Dawson, went to Fall Creek Saturday night and was to bring the body to Madison today. The body was to be buried in the First-Lawrence funeral home.

How Dawson Solved Jager Mystery

It was on Madison day during the Dane county fair in August, 1925, that Dawson brought the Jager case to a conclusion.

Jager, wealthy recluse of the Black Hawk hills in Sauk County, was the subject of a long and sensational trial.

He was arrested in 1924 on charges of kidnapping and murder. He was held in the Dane county jail for several months.

He was finally released in 1925 after a long and sensational trial. Dawson's role in the case was a subject of much speculation.
